Upland allowing pinball, video 'immorality'

Obscure city code outlaws coin-run games

By Frank C. Girardot

Possession of a pinball machine is a misdemeanor in Upland.

The obscure law came as a surprise to city officials and owners of local arcades.

The "public welfare and morals" section of the municipal code contains a law passed in 1955 that prohibits the ownership of pinball machines or "any similar device by whatever name known, use or play of which is controlled by placing therein any coin"

City ordinance No. 500 also decrees: "If said machine contains money, such money shall be deposited in the general fund."

City Attorney Don Maroney said the city has only enforced the law in cases where pay-outs were made to high-scoring players by game owners. He could not recall the last time the law was used.

He added that U.S. Supreme Court decisions have limited the city's ability to enforce the law. At Arrow Liquors, across the street from Upland City Hall, there is a total of five video games — all of which could be considered in violation of the ordinance. The Family Fun Center, 1560 W. Seventh St., may be the biggest violator with 76 video games and eight pinball machines.

"I don't think it's a law the city would care to enforce," said Mike Brooks, the center's general manager. Assistant City Manager Mike Matlock acknowledged there are oddities in the code, but noted: "That section of the code doesn't reflect the current community standards on such things."

"Laws such as these come out of the McCarthy era, when gambling was considered a vice," said Bob Say, a spokesman for the American Amusement Manufacturers Association.

Wishes of children come true with Sugar Plum Tree project

By Brian Soergel

Montclair Plaza shoppers have the chance to fulfill Christmas wishes of west end children in San Bernardino County during the 10th annual Sugar Plum Tree project.

The program supplies
Christmas gifts to children served by San Bernardino County Child Protective Services and adoption agencies. Trees will also be in malls in Redlands and Victorville.

The sugar plum tree, located on the lower level near the west end escalator, will be up until Dec. 15

As people shop, they can stop at the Sugar Plum Tree and choose the name of a child to buy a gift for.

Many families return to the tree each year, says Paula Dempsey of Montclair Plaza. Often, they choose gift cards for children who are the same age as their own so they can help buy a gift.

Names chosen come from a list of foster children and children in families in crisis. The list is prepared by Children's Services social buy a gift for a boy or girl, or they will be given a child's name, age and suggested gifts.

Those buying gifts will receive handmade ornaments to hang on their Christmas trees.

Volunteers to be stationed by the tree include people from the National Charity League, Ticktockers, Chaffey College, foster parents, social workers and others.

"We get wonderful stories from the volunteers each year," said Kathy Espinoza, Child Welfare Services supervisor for San Bernardino County and a project coordinator.

She spoke of a young man who came to the tree with $9 and asked the volunteer if it was enough for a present.

It was more than enough, Espinoza said.

"It means a lot to these kids that there is someone out there that cares enough to buy gifts for them," Espinoza said.

Nineteen-year-old Yvonne

Long said she is grateful for the gifts she has received. Long, who is no longer considered a foster child because of her age, still lives with the woman who took her in, Triscia Negus of Chino.

Last year, she said, she received a $50 gift certificate. She has also been given sweaters in the past.

Long is one of 13 children living with Negus.

"It's a good program," Long said. "All the kids here get presents from the tree."

The tree was donated by the Valley View Christmas Tree Farm in Alta Loma, said Espinoza.

The Montclair Fire
Department draped lights around the tree and put decorations on its top.

The Greater Ontario Visitors and Convention Bureau has its annual holiday reception at Ontario City Hall Dec. 7, with proceeds to benefit the project.

Major contributions are given by department stores at Montclair Plaza and wrapping paper for gifts is donated also, Espinoza said.

"Every year it seems to get bigger and bigger," she said. "More people are becoming involved."

For some, head injury can mean nearly starting over

By Sarah E. Crowley

Leloni Bechtel bent her head forward, sipped through a straw, and waited a moment while therapist Jan Martinez watched and counted.

"One, two, three, four. Swallow," commanded Martinez, a speech pathologist at Casa Colina Centers for Rehabilitation in Pomona.

Sitting in her wheelchair, Bechtel responded, and smiled up at her teacher.

"I did it that time," she said slowly, and lowered her head to try again.

It may not seem like such a big deal, but Bechtel was learning how to swallow. Or rather, relearning to swallow with the goal of eventually downing a mouthful of water without choking.

Why? Because the Pinon Hills woman suffers from a brain injury. Once an active horsewoman, she developed leukemia, and underwent chemotherapy which affected her cerebellum, an area of the brain involved with muscle

As a result, she has a condition called ataxia, and attends regular speech and physical therapy sessions at the Pomona center.

Bechtel is only one of thousands of people whose lives, and the lives of their families, have been changed forever by severe brain injuries.

These injuries come in all degrees of severity and are caused by a myriad of accidents. However, one aspect seems to remain constant - it can happen to anybody.

According to medical experts, brain injury is considered one of the most difficult injuries to treat because it has the potential for causing physical, cognitive, emotional and behavioral problems.

The problem is that the brain is a free-floating object suspended in fluid in the skull. When that skull hits something solid (like a car's dashboard) the brain continues to move forward at the same speed. It See INJURY/Page 7

S.B. County has had its fill of state prisons

By Steve Ray Linam

SAN BERNARDINO - San Bernardino County Administrator Officer Harry Mays summed up his feelings Thursday about the prospect of any more state prisons in the county in one sentence.

'We don't want any more." Mays and other Southern California county officials vented their frustrations over overcrowded inmate populations and public opposition to site selections of state prisons and county jails during a symposium held on the Cal State University San Bernardino campus.

Mays also took the opportunity to respond to a recent American Civil Liberties Union Lawsuit against the county concerning overcrowding of jail inmates.

"I really don't know what they want us to do," Mays said.

The county has already been using all available space at the San Bernardino Central Jail, including the chapel, to house inmates, he said.

The lawsuit is forcing the county to consider releasing convicted felons, Mays said.

Several panelists, all connected to the criminal justice field, spun tales of public opposition to jails or prisons being located in a community.

Mays cited explosive growth in Rancho Cucamonga which forced the county to relocate its original site for a 960-bed jail from downtown to a site near the former Kaiser Steel plant.

'Realistically, it's one hell of a political issue," he added.

Mays also objected to using George Air Force Base, near Adelanto, for a prison. The county prefers to use the base, which is slated for closure, for a project that will offer economic opportunity, he said.

Earlier in the forum, Sen. Bill Presley, D-Riverside, envisioned the base housing both a prison and an airport.

"It would be a great industry for Victor Valley," Presley said. However, he stressed the priority should be with the airport.

Several of the symposium speakers took Los Angeles County to task for stalling on Heavy workload draws fire

By Steve Ray Linam

The state Department of Corrections should lend a hand to county judicial systems that have to deal with prisons, a San Bernardino County Superior Court judge said Thursday.

Supervising Superior Court Judge Duke Rouse took state prison officials to task for ignoring what he considers a heavy judicial workload caused by prisons.

Rouse made his comments during a prison site symposium held on the California State University San Bernardino campus

The corrections department should consider naming more superior court judges and support staff when selecting a new prison site.

'It doesn't appear that is factored in. These are things that should be considered.

Judges constantly deal with prison-related legal work such as handling murder cases, crimes that occur in the penal institutions and court order requests from prisoners.

In 1988, San Bernardino County judges handled 525 such requests from prisoners, a situation that Rouse said prompted him to rule that the corrections department was not handling the process in an orderly fashion.

construction of a prison. The state Department of Corrections has selected a site in the Los Angeles industrial district and near Lancaster for prison sites.

The panelists charged that most of the state's prison population originates from Los Angeles County.

"We think Los Angeles ought to take care of its share," Mays

However, a San Diego County official bemoaned the task of finding a prison or jail sites in urban counties.

"Urban counties have a finite amount of geography," said Rich Robinson, director of the county's special projects office. Municipalities are relunctant to share in the cost or location of a jail, Robinson said.

'The operation, financing and construction of a jail is viewed as a county problem," he said.

Larry Smith, a representative of the Riverside County Sheriff's Office, cited a survey where county residents favored a new iail - but not in their community.

"People don't want jails in their backyards. Siting a jail involves money and political pressure," he said.

L.A. Fair expands to 24-day run

By Maresa Archer

The Los Angeles County Fair will extend its run by six days next year, the board of directors announced Tuesday.

The fair, which ran 18 days this year, will expand to 24 days starting Sept. 7 and running through Sept. 30. The addition is to include an extra weekend that fair organizers say will ease weekend overcrowding. In addition, the extended dates should relieve traffic congestion, parking problems and long patron lines

"This will give us the opportunity to better serve our fair guests and it will provide them easier access to the fairgrounds," said Ralph M. Hinds, Fair Association president and chief executive

With the extended run, total attendance is expected to increase slightly over the entire run, while the daily total is expected to drop.

"We hope to do no worse than break even at the gates, and there is the possibility that we could increase revenues," Hinds said. "But that is not our motivation. Our motivation is to better serve our fairgoers."

The additional fair days are also expected to increase the fair's economic impact on Pomona and the surrounding

52-unit project proposed

By William Diepenbrock

The Montclair Planning Commission last week forwarded to the City Council a 52-unit housing project planned for the 10900 block of Ramona Avenue - the city's largest residential proposal in four Members unanimously approved a driveway variance, a tentative tract map, a precise plan of design and a key zoning ordinance that will allow sizes of about half the usual 11,000 square foot standard.

The project, comprised of oneand two-story homes, is the first time Montclair's small lot housing ordinance has been used in the city's southern area, said City Planner Hal Fredericksen.

With lots an average of 5,486 square feet, the development will replace a truck terminal operation that has had land owner Gary Hann at odds with the commission several times.

"The use would substitute a clean residential use for the previously declared nuisance of the trucking terminal," added Fredericksen.

Turpin Whitebrook has presented designs that emphasize large back yards for the three- and four-bedroom homes, which range between 1,485 and 2,267 square feet.

'The developer is concerned that these fairly large homes ... need a good sized yard to accommodate a stable, larger family household," Fredericksen said during his presentation.

Developer representative Robert Nathan agreed, pointing out during the public hearing that these back yards will be the main source of recreation for residents.

'We're trying to create a neighborhood for the people who are going to live in those homes," Nathan said. "We think that the zone changes and variances in this project will ultimately benefit the homeowners and city of Montclair.'

More funds for family planning expected

Lobbyist anticipates restoration early next year

By David Wert

Funding for the state's beleaguered family-planning programs should be restored early in the new year, San Bernardino County's Sacramento lobbyist told the Board of Supervisors Monday.

John Quimby, whose job it is to look after the county's interests at the state Capitol, predicted that pro-family planning lawmakers will draft legislation to fully fund the state Office of Family Planning 44It was only a $26 million appropriation. It never should have been this controversial. "

through the rest of the fiscal year and include wording that ensures none of the money will go toward clinics that perform abortions

It was the abortion issue that transformed the small, ordinarily non-controversial proposed family planning allocation into a political battle, with counties left in the middle, he said.

"It was only a $26 million appropriation. It never should have been this controversial.' Quimby said.

When Gov. George Deukmejian in July cut twothirds of that budget, many counties, including San Bernardino, were unable to fully fund their birth control, pregnancy counseling and women's health care programs.

San Bernardino County has had to drastically reduce hours at nine of its 11 clinics, including sites in Chino and Fontana, and make plans to completely close those facilities Feb. 28 if funding is not restored before then.

The only clinics whose hours were left intact are those in Ontario and San Bernardino. But officials say increased demand from patients unable to get an

UPS gets rights to taxi jets

By Candysse Miller

After nearly five years of negotiations, United Parcel Service may soon punch through the fence at Ontario International Airport.

In a tentative agreement with the Los Angeles Department of Airports, the cargo company will pay $2 million for access rights allowing it to taxi jets from ONT runways to an adjoining sorting hub. The agreement would be for 40 years.

The move would make UPS the only carrier to be based off airport grounds at any Los Angeles-owned airport.

Airport commissioners reluctantly agreed to the compromise last week, worrying about the loss of $400,000 a year and fearing added noise lawsuits and complaints of unfairness from other air carriers. The airport board has not yet signed the final contract with UPS.

"Obviously, we would rather not have this at all. We wish the land was ours and we could handle UPS as a tenant," said Donald Miller, DOA deputy executive director.

Under the tentative agreement, UPS will also pay for land made useless by its project, continue to pay airport landing fees and not allow any other air carriers to operate out of its hub.

The airport agency has no other agreements allowing air See UPS/Page 6

SAN BERNARDINO -Those hoping to keep Norton Air Force Base open despite the Pentagon's wishes lauded a government report that showed the military won't save as much as it thought by shutting the installation down.

Larry Sharp, president of the San Bernardino Chamber of Commerce, said he hopes the study will give the diminishing effort to keep the base open a much-needed shot in the arm.

He said he now is convinced the military artificially boosted the estimate to convince Congress to shutter the base.

But Earl Goodwin, project director for the Norton Economic Expansion Committee, said closing the base could be the best thing to 44 think there was a lot of wishful thinking. "" happen to the San Bernardino area, in an economic sense,

He also said he believes many of those who might have initially been opposed to the shutdown now see what a financial boon the military's exodus might be.

Sharp and Goodwin were reacting to a federal General Accounting Office study released Wednesday that showed the Defense Department base closure commission overestimated by $9.5 million what would be saved each year by closing

"I think there was a lot of wishful thinking," Sharp said. "I suspect that the military wanted to close those bases in order to consolidate, and that the dollars were not as important as the span of control and efficiencies.

"I don't think it's too late to stop the (closure) from going forward, if there is enough desire in the community," he added. "I don't see any reason why we couldn't fight.'

Sharp said there is no organized group aiming to keep the base open, "but the GAO study hopefully will rekindle that.'

He said the Inland Empire could expect to lose 8,000 jobs and $1 billion in annual revenue when the base closes in 1994.

appointment at one of the other sites has created long waiting lists at the other two.

Deukmejian and most state lawmakers objected to the fact that some counties, including Los Angeles and San Francisco but not San Bernardino, had diverted state family planning funds to private abortion clinics.

Los Angeles County officials said the funds were earmarked for the private clinics' birth control programs, but pro-life legislators said the diversions violated the spirit in which the funds were provided.

Since the cut was made,

Assembly Democrats Jerry Eaves of Rialto and Maxine Waters of Los Angeles have led the fight to get the funds restored.

But the cost of large back yards - a variance allowing driveways as much as five feet shorter than the city residential standard of 25 feet - had several commissioners uneasy.

"The only problem I have is the 20-foot setback," said Commisioner Al Yoakum, who said his car is 22 feet long. "It looks to me as if it's going to extend over into the sidewalk."

Yoakum was joined in his criticism by Chairman Luis Flores and Frank Decoteau.

"It's a concern to me especially on the cul de sac lots where everything's going to be crowded already," Flores said.
"They have such huge back yards.

Fredericksen pointed out that garages are built 20 feet by 20 feet as a standard and said cars longer than 20 feet comprise only about five percent of those on the road.

However, the commission only asked staff to work with Hann and his partners to lengthen if possible the 10 or so homes that have driveways shorter than 22 feet.

Commissioners also paused to congratulate the developers for their design. The scattered setback does make the subdivsion more of a neighborhood, Yoakum said.

"I'm sure it's going to add to the city," Flores said.

'We want to get started as soon as we can. We're moving forward," replied Hann.

Goodwin said the Air Force has been a good neighbor to San Bernardino, in terms of community involvement and the local economy. But other communities in other states that have lost military bases have by and large experienced increased economic growth, he said.

'We suspect that will be true in San Bernardino," Goodwin

But Sharp said the economy will suffer greatly after the base shuts down before any new development gets up to speed.

"The development of housing will help fill the gap, but we need to fill the job gap," he said.

Goodwin agreed there will be a lull in the local economy, "but in the long run, the benefits that other communities have derived encourage us to believe that will be the case here.'

The Norton committee directed by Goodwin is studying the effect the base closure and resulting commercial development will have on the Inland Empire. Goodwin said preliminary information should be available in mid-January, with the final report issued in late February.

carriers to cross airport boundaries onto the carrier's land. Airport commissioners worried that such an agreement with UPS would set a dangerous precedent.

"Our revenue will go to zero when they make that move," said Glen J. Kroh, manager of airport properties. "Two million dollars represents only five years of parking fees.

While airport staff argued that $2 million is too low a price for access to ONT, two appraisers hired by UPS set the value of the land at $500,000.

UPS currently pays $400,000 a year to park its jets at the airport. When it moves to its own property, however, that revenue will vanish.

Kroh, who led negotiations with the cargo company, also said that allowing UPS to work from its own land rather than lease airort property gives it an unfair edge over its competitors.

But UPS airport property manager Theodore Troncoso said that the savings in parking fees were balanced by the cost of the property.

Representatives of the air cargo giant breathed a sigh of relief once the board voted 3-1 to wrap up negotiations, but they still await final approval by the Los Angeles City Council.

"I have a feeling it's going to be one more Christmas on the north side," said Troncoso.

UPS officials expected to open the 160-acre, $53 million hub in time for its 1989 Christmas shipping rush, but deadlocked negotiations stalled the project. It is now unlikely that the site will be ready for aircraft before Christmas 1991.

According to the National Head Injury Foundation, an estimated seven million traumatic brain injuries occur a year. The Massachusetts group places accompanying medical and rehabilitative costs at about $80 a second or about $6.9 million annually.

While Bechtel's problem is certainly not rare, the majority of brain injuries seem to involve contact sports or vehicle accidents involving autos, bicycles or helmetless motorcyclists.

An estimated 450,000 Americans experience minor head injuries every year, representing about 90 percent of all head injuries.

A large part of these suffered concussions, a blow to the head which can cause loss of shortterm memory, double vision and loss of balance, among other

According to Joe Baumgaertner, administrative director of Pomona Valley Hospital Medical Center's sports medicine division, football is the "big one" as far as concussions are concerned.

And the major reason for these accidents happening at all is ill-fitting equipment.

"Properly fitting equipment is essential, especially in football. Unfortunately, if you have a high school team with 20 members, 20 helmets and 10 kids with big heads, you're going to have trouble," said Baumgaertner, who conducts special classes area coaches which focus on injury prevention.

"The bottom line is that you can't do much to prevent these accidents other than avoid the sport," he said.

While accidents can happen to anyone, those most likely to have them are under 35, simply because they're more active and more likely to take risks, said David N. Brown, a Pomona neurological surgeon who works with San Antonio Community Hospital and Pomona Valley Hospital Medical Center.

With more than 20 years experience in the field, Brown added that clinical treatment depended on the type and severity of the accident, and that no case was exactly alike.

Also, he said due to recent technological advances in the field, the myth that head injuries always resulted in death was 'far from the truth. We save a lot of people now.

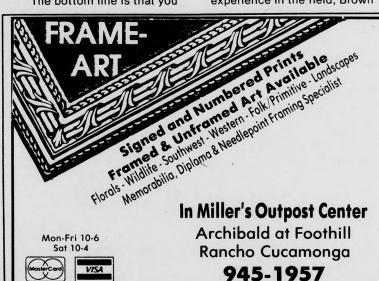

Saving them is one thing, but for the individual who survives the initial injury, the trauma of reintegrating back into society can be an almost impossible challenge.

'More patients are being kept alive who are not functionally intact," said Rick Olcese, neuropscychologist at Casa Colina's Transitional Living Center.

Based on a "neurobehavioral" approach involving the patient's physical and emotional problems, the program is designed to help them become independent, productive members of society.
